Event Overview and Objective

The Global Education Fair 2026 brought students and international university representatives together on campus. ISArch coordinated the participation of its second-, third- and fourth-year architecture students. The objective was to introduce global higher education opportunities, portfolio expectations and application planning, including postgraduate pathways in Sustainable Architecture, Urban Design and Heritage Conservation.

Event Highlights

1. Batch Participation and Faculty Coordination

Third- and fourth-year students attended the morning session, while second-year students attended the afternoon session. Student movement was organized section-wise under faculty supervision. The schedule supported higher education planning for senior students and early awareness of overseas academic requirements for second-year students.

2. University Interaction and Academic Pathways

Students interacted with representatives at university helpdesks covering destinations including the UK, Australia, Europe, the USA, Singapore, Malaysia and Dubai. Discussions addressed postgraduate study, architectural specializations, computational design, portfolio requirements and research-oriented programmes, helping students relate international study options to their academic interests.

3. Applications and Financial Guidance

The fair provided guidance on application procedures, eligibility tests, portfolio preparation, scholarships and education loan assistance. Information presented included scholarship opportunities described as offering tuition-fee waivers of up to 50%. These discussions introduced students to the academic and financial considerations involved in planning overseas study.

Participation and Feedback

The supplied event account records positive feedback from participating students and faculty, with active student interaction at the helpdesks. Faculty coordination supported orderly attendance across the session. The fair provided exposure to international study options and the preparation involved in pursuing them.
